Rectal bleeding

Experiencing bleeding from the back passage when going to the toilet can be very worrying, particularly when experienced for the first time.

Rectal bleeding is common, and symptoms usually develop very quickly. Whilst most causes are not serious and can be treated, in some cases, rectal bleeding can be a symptom of a serious disease such as colorectal cancer. We have developed a new, all-inclusive package to diagnose the cause of rectal bleeding.

Treatment

Treatment is tailored to your own particular problems and include the following:

- Flexible sigmoidoscopy to investigate bleeding from the rectum
- Banding of haemorrhoids if required

Why choose Bupa Cromwell Hospital for bleeding treatment?

We have developed a new, all-inclusive self-paying package, rectal bleeding, led by our highly experienced Endoscopy (JAG) accredited Team. Just to make sure of the diagnosis an endoscopic service has demonstrated against standards required by the endoscopy unit.

The GP or patient (if self-referring) who needs urgent endoscopic treatment will be booked into the hospital for a Consultant assessment, endoscopy and treatment of haemorrhoids (if required). If a more serious condition is suspected, they will be offered prompt referral to a Bupa Cromwell Hospital specialist.

The consultation, endoscopy and treatment will all take place on the same day.

How much does the service cost?

- The all-inclusive self-paying package price of £1,650. If patients do not require all of the services included in the pathway, they will be refunded for these.
- Patients with private medical insurance should be covered by their policy but would need to check this prior to booking.
